"Implosion of the institution Stadttheater? History, Analysis, Perspectives"

Master Class, Lectures and Panel Discussions

25.-27. Oktober 2018

Goethe-University Frankfurt, Campus Westend, Casino Raum 1.811

In view of the debates concerning the current crisis occurring in the German Stadttheater, the Master Class seeks to bring the underlying economic, artistic and political issues as well as the opportunities associated with this crisis into discussion. The term "implosion" refers to the fact that the number of "stagings on public stages" today is 50% higher than in the first season after the reunification, though the number of visitors per season has remained constant at about 20 million. Nonetheless, the number of tenured ensemble members has been reduced by 50% during this period: despite dwindling interest, more is produced with fewer artistic employees. The public theatre institutions, it could be summed, have become a prime example of neoliberal modes of production, or the new spirit of capitalism (Boltanski/Chiapello), which are readily criticized on stage and on the theaters’ podiums. The circumstances of many artists working on these stages quickly approximates those which have always been the social reality of most "free-lance" performing artists. In addition, divisions or entire theatres are closed or consolidated into larger entities with dubious prospects of success.

In the search for causes of the crisis, it is necessary to address the ideology of a state, which gives as little support to the field of theatre as it does for the universities and colleges, the health service or the public-transport infrastructure. Further to be addressed is the soon to be bursting "Reeducation bubble" (Dirk Baecker), to which the theatres in this country still owe their relatively generous subsidies. It is imperative to consider the questions raised by "post-migrant" theatres such as the Maxim Gorki Theater, the Münchner Kammerspiele or the Kampnagel production-house; whether in times of globalization and in a society that has been altered by a variety of migrations, the stages could and should be opened to other agents: people with diverse social and cultural backgrounds, with variant knowledge and experiences as well as different methods of expressions. It must also be reflected upon the debate on the reallocation of the Volksbühne and the failure of its revised program. Is it justifiable to prioritize one single art form over many others - pop concerts, radio plays, dance, digital game culture, film, installation art and public art, happenings, performance art, site-specific art, community theatre, etc.? What is the situation of the German institutions in comparison with similarly highly subsidized institutions in other countries (e.g. in Norway, Finland, France or Belgium)?

The Master Class is the culmination of a seminar jointly offered by Tore Vagn Lid and Nikolaus Müller-Schöll, as well as the lecture series on "Dramaturgies of Theatre Architecture", having taken place during the 2018 summer semester.
